Dinner with Mark is a painting that depicts Mark Zuckerberg, the founder and CEO of Facebook, holding a severed goats head on a wooden spike whilst giving a speech at a conference. In a 2019 interview with Rolling Stone, Twitter CEO Jack Dorsey stated that there was a year when Zuckerberg was only eating what he was killing, and had a penchant for goat meat. Supposedly he would stun goats with a taser, cut their throat with a knife and have their bodies sent to a butcher to prepare. Being served goat for dinner whilst attending a dinner party at Zuckerberg's house was Dorsey's most memorable encounter with Zuckerberg.
